

GEW 6901: Spring 2019 (Wednesday, periods 9-11)
Tur Hall 2336
Office hrs: Tues/Wed period 6

Eric Kligerman
Office: Walker 206
ekligerm@ufl.edu

From Antigone to 9/11: Representations of Political Violence and Terror

By probing some of the core traumas of the 20th century--colonialism, totalitarianism, the Holocaust, Vietnam and terrorism--this interdisciplinary course seeks to examine representations of historical violence through shifting philosophical, theoretical and aesthetic frames. This comparative study of political violence and terrorism will enable us to analyze what Habermas calls the "unfinished project of modernity," where the contemporary events of terrorism are themselves derivative of some of the key components of modernity. How does the political promise of the Enlightenment (reason in history) collapse into the pathologies of modernity? The course is divided into six parts:

Antigone

The first section functions as the foundation to the seminar and sets the trajectory of the course. We begin with an analysis of Sophocles' Antigone--the iconic figure of the individual rebelling against the state--and examine the impact the tragedy has had on political theory, philosophy and psychoanalysis. The themes central to Antigone haunt the other texts throughout the semester: the individual versus the state, law, political violence, gender, discourse of modernity, art's relation to violence and concepts of spectatorship.

Colonialism

We turn in the second section to issues regarding colonialism and imperialism as seen in Conrad's Heart of Darkness and Kafka's In the Penal Colony. Our study of these texts will be conjoined to readings from Adorno's Dialectic of Enlightenment and Foucault's study Discipline and Punishment.

National Socialism and anti-Semitism

The third and fourth sections explore the period of National Socialism and its after effects in postwar German memory. The primary text is Arendt's Eichmann in Jerusalem. We conclude this section by turning to representations of resistance against the Third Reich as seen in Tarantino's Inglourious Basterds.

The German Autumn: The Red Army Faction

The fourth section of the seminar focuses on German terrorism of the 1970s and the legacy of the Baader-Meinhof Gang. Why has this period of German history had such a profound impact on the collective imagination of the country and how does it continue to disturb German memory? The RAF is portrayed as fighting against not only the government of the Federal Republic but also against Germany's Nazi past. Our readings of Hegel, Adorno, Freud, and Arendt will help us frame our understanding of the "Red Decade" and our viewing of Marianne and Juliane.

The Vietnam War

Our analysis of the Vietnam War will be tangentially approached through the lens of two documentaries on The Rolling Stones: the Maysles' Gimme Shelter. Our discussion of spectatorship, media, visual pleasure, eroticized and wounded bodies will be mediated through the Mark Selzer's concept of "Wound Culture".

September 11th

The seminar concludes by probing the political and philosophical significance of 9/11 in relation to questions of post modernity. We will explore how such critics as Habermas and Derrida read modernity's failure through the violence of 9/11.

Schedule (subject to change)

Weeks 1 and 2: Introduction: Tracing Antigone in German Intellectual Thought.

1/9 and 1/16

Sophocles' Antigone

Weeks 3, 4 and 5:

1/23, 1/30 and 2/6

Conrad, Heart of Darkness

Adorno and Horkheimer, Dialectic of Enlightenment ("The Concept of Enlightenment" and "Odysseus or Myth and Enlightenment").

Weeks 6 and 7:

2/13 and 2/20

Kafka, In der Strafkolonie (In the Penal Colony)

Foucault, Discipline and Punish (Part One: Torture)

Weeks 8, 9 and 10:

2/27, 3/6 (spring break) and 3/13

Arendt, Eichmann in Jerusalem: Report on the Banality of Evil

Week 11:

3/20

Tarantino's Inglourious Basterds (screening)

Weeks 12 and 13:

3/27 and 4/3

Alter's "Framing Terrorism: Beyond the Borders";

Mariane and Julianne (screening)

Weeks 14 and 15:

4/10 and 4/17

Albert and David Maysles's Gimme Shelter (screening)
Seltzer, Wound Culture

Weeks 16:

Habermas and Derrida, Philosophy in a Time of Terror
Don Delillo, "In the Ruins of the Future"

Required Texts:

Sophocles I: Three Tragedies (Antigone), Second Edition, Ed. by David Grene and Richard Lattimore, trans. by David Grene (Chicago) or your own edition

Joseph Conrad, Heart of Darkness (Bantam Classics)

Adorno and Horkheimer, Dialectic of Enlightenment

Hannah Arendt, Eichmann in Jerusalem: Report on the Banality of Evil

Habermas and Derrida, Philosophy in a Time of Terror (Chicago)

Class Requirements:

Class Participation: you are expected to come to class prepared with readings and/or screenings for that particular week. It is essential that students partake each week in seminar discussions. 15%

Class Presentation: each student will be expected to give a 20-minute presentation and help lead class discussion on one text (seminar topic) during the semester. 10%

Final Paper: 15-page research paper on topic of your choice. 75%